

THE BOARD PLANS

Edward McAndrew

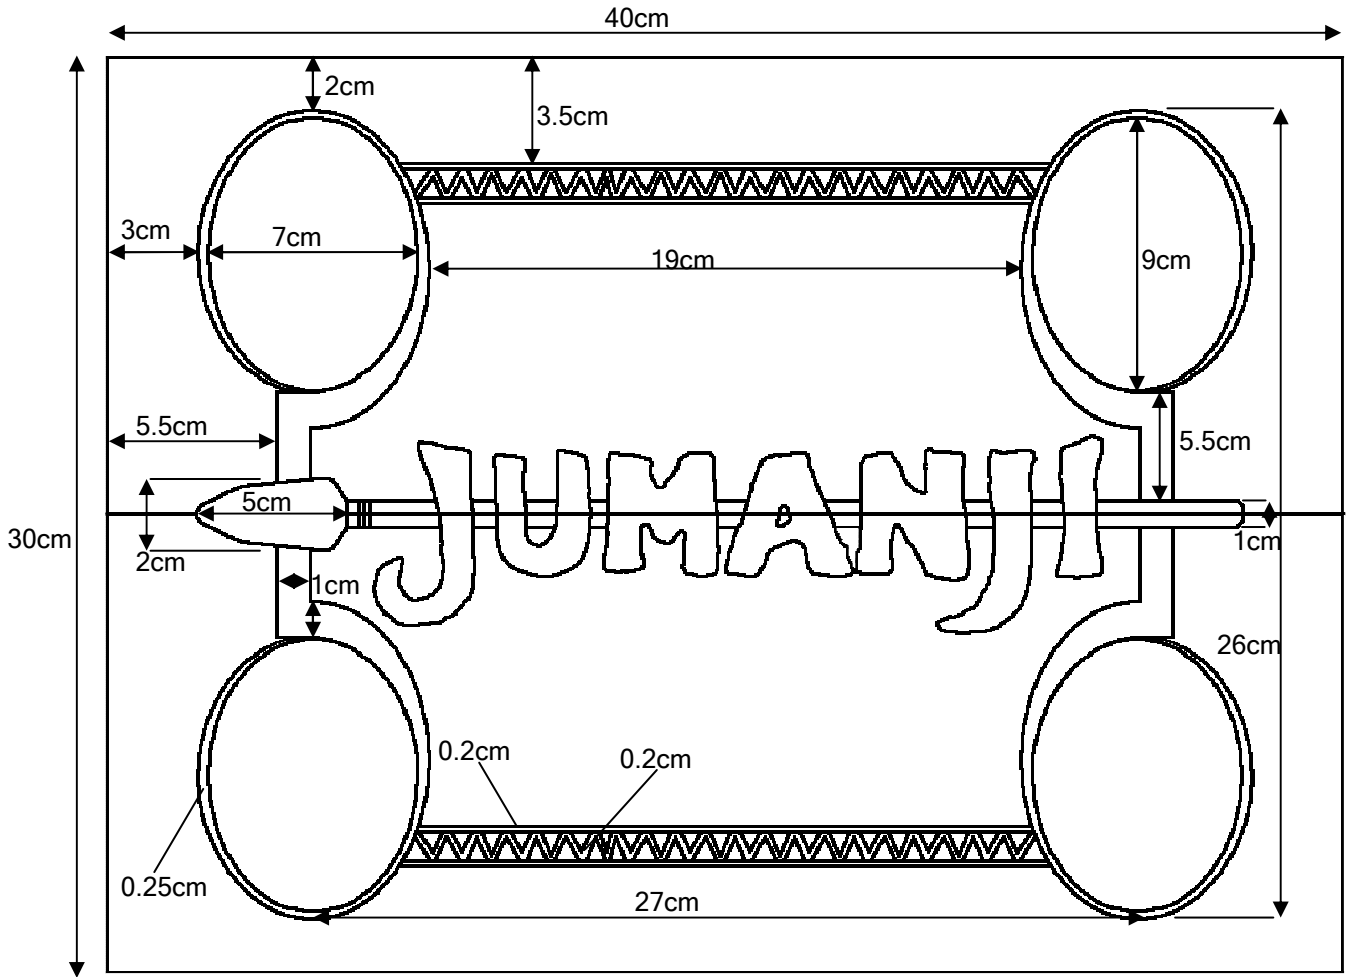

Version 1:

A work in progress. Many things to add, but accurate measurements.

Please do not sell or distribute.

This booklet is purely made for enjoyment.

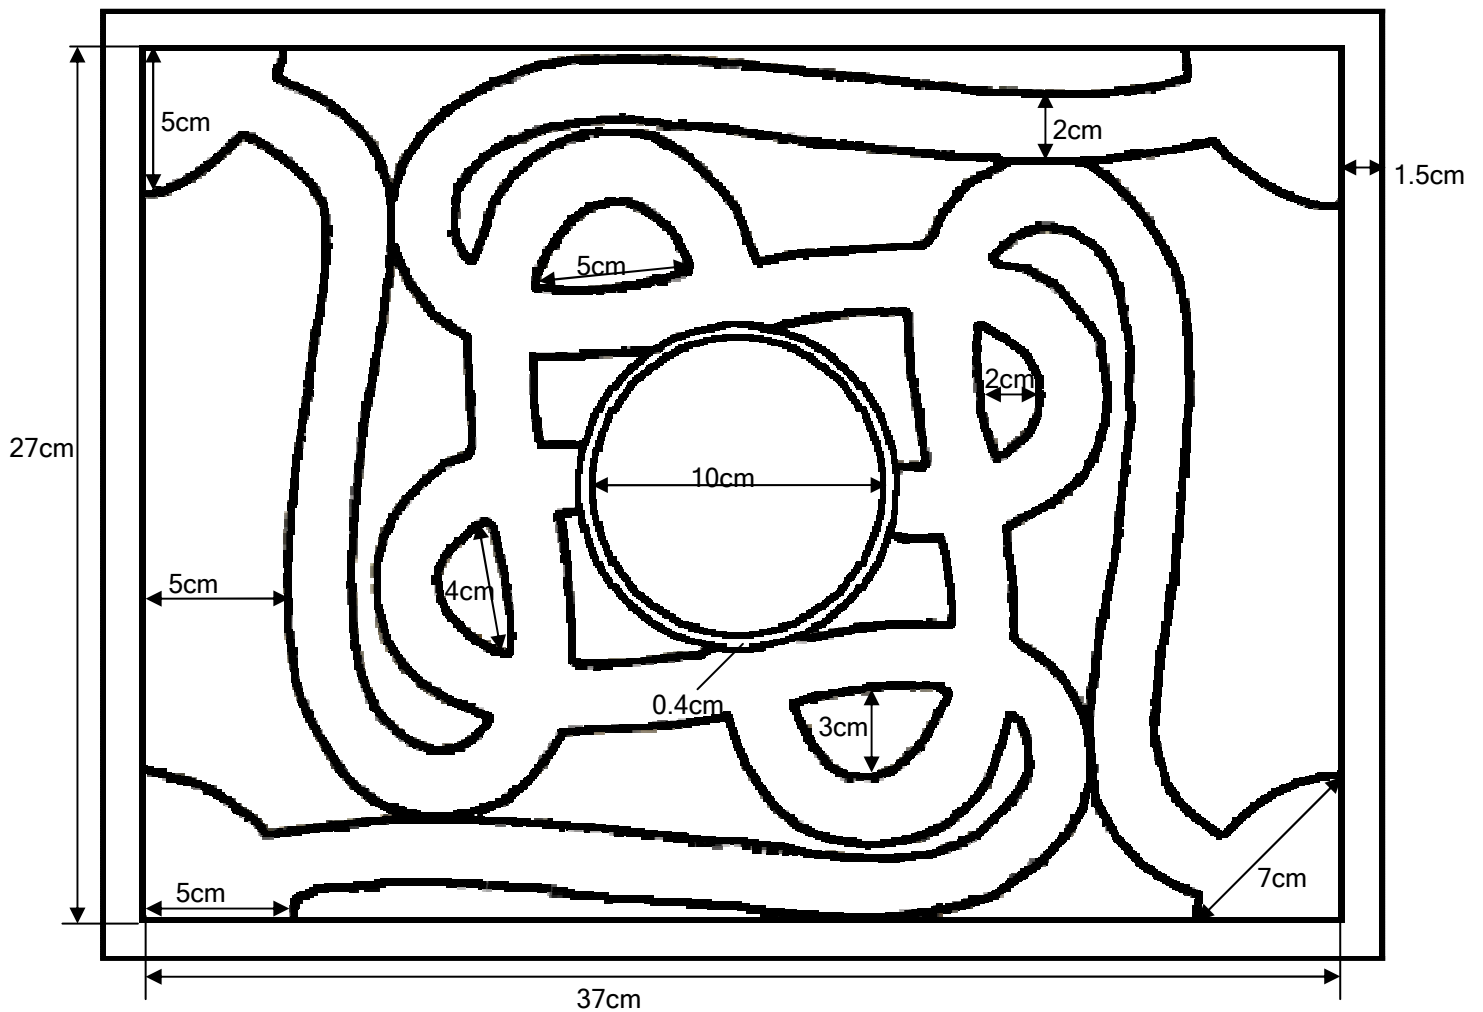

Board Lid (s):

The lids of the board are covered with ornately carved images. The main of which have been outlined above. They only sit out by about 1-3 mm at any one point. They are defined by having areas carved away from the board, leaving a 3D image. The outline of the entire image is created by a carved line, circling the cluster of decorative carving.

The finer decorations are not outlined here.

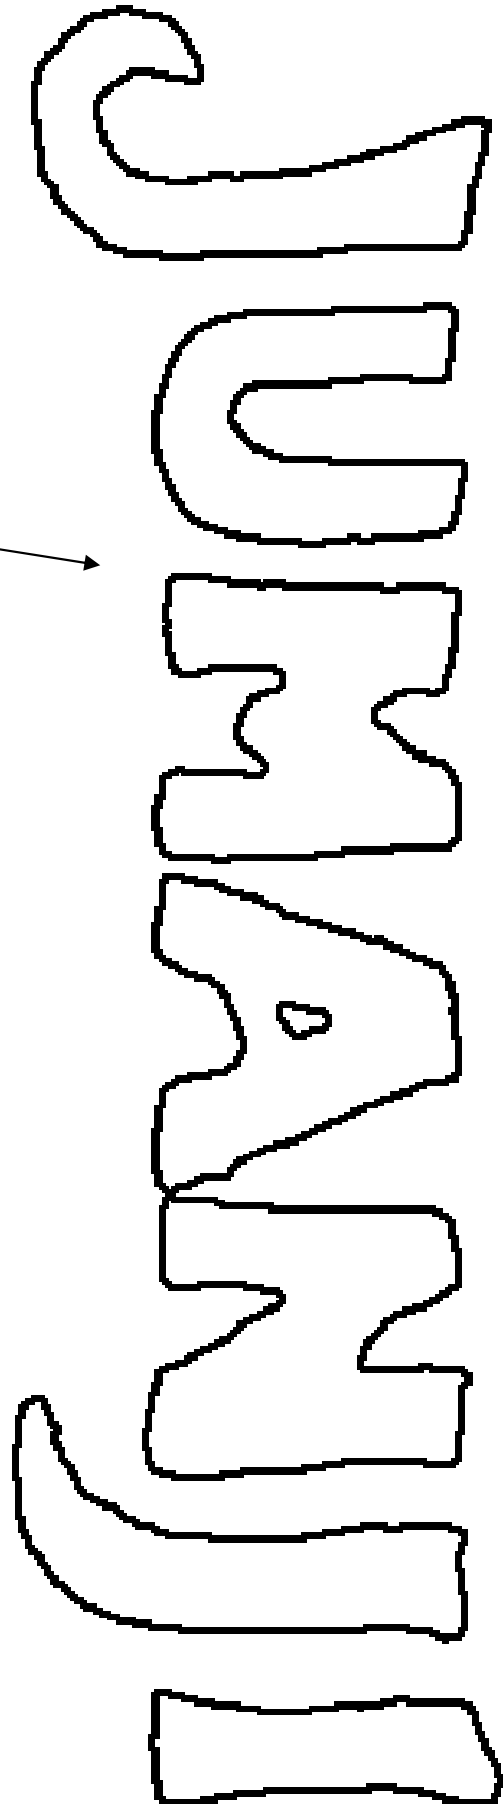

Board Path:

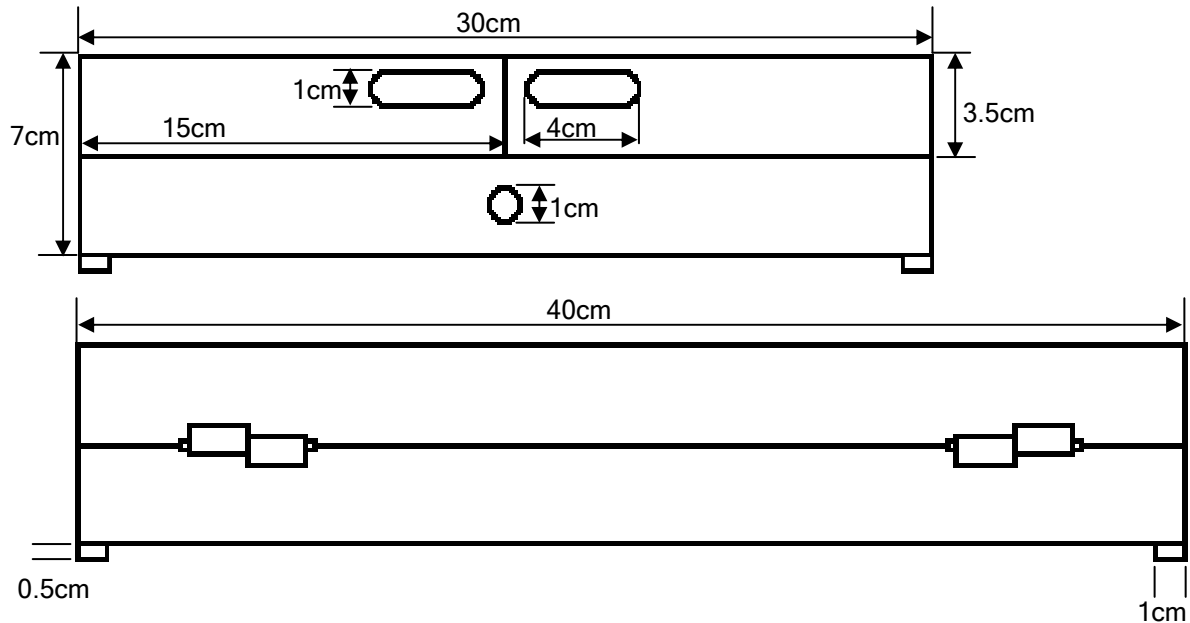

The paths of the game look as if they have been carved out of ivory, or a finely painted wood. The number of spaces varies between each path, to make all of the spaces appear to be an even size. The center dial appears to have been made of a thick, green, transparent glass. It is surrounded by a ring of metal, with a pattern carved into it, similar to the one on the lid. The pattern is broken by four smooth ramps that allow to pieces to slide onto the glass dial.

A 1:1 scale diagram of the letter layout that is found on the lid of the board.

*This is provided due to the impossibility of providing measurements of the letters

Board Sides:

The sides of the game are of a dark wood. On the shorter of the two sides, there are little nooks to grab with your fingers to aid with the opening of the game. Accompanying them is a small white knob, of whose value is unknown.

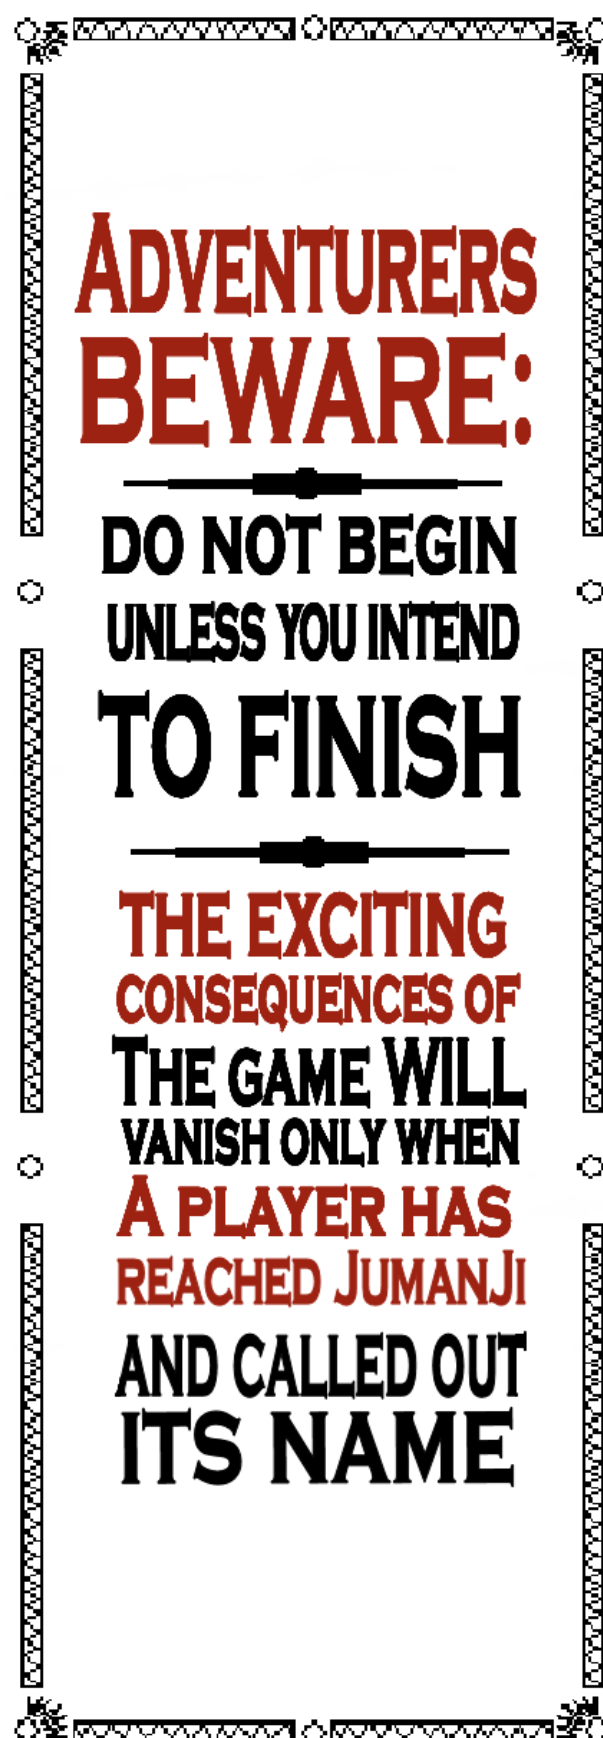

On the longer of the sides, the hinges can be seen. These appear to be carved out of the same piece of wood that makes up the board, with a stick of ivory acting as the connector between them..

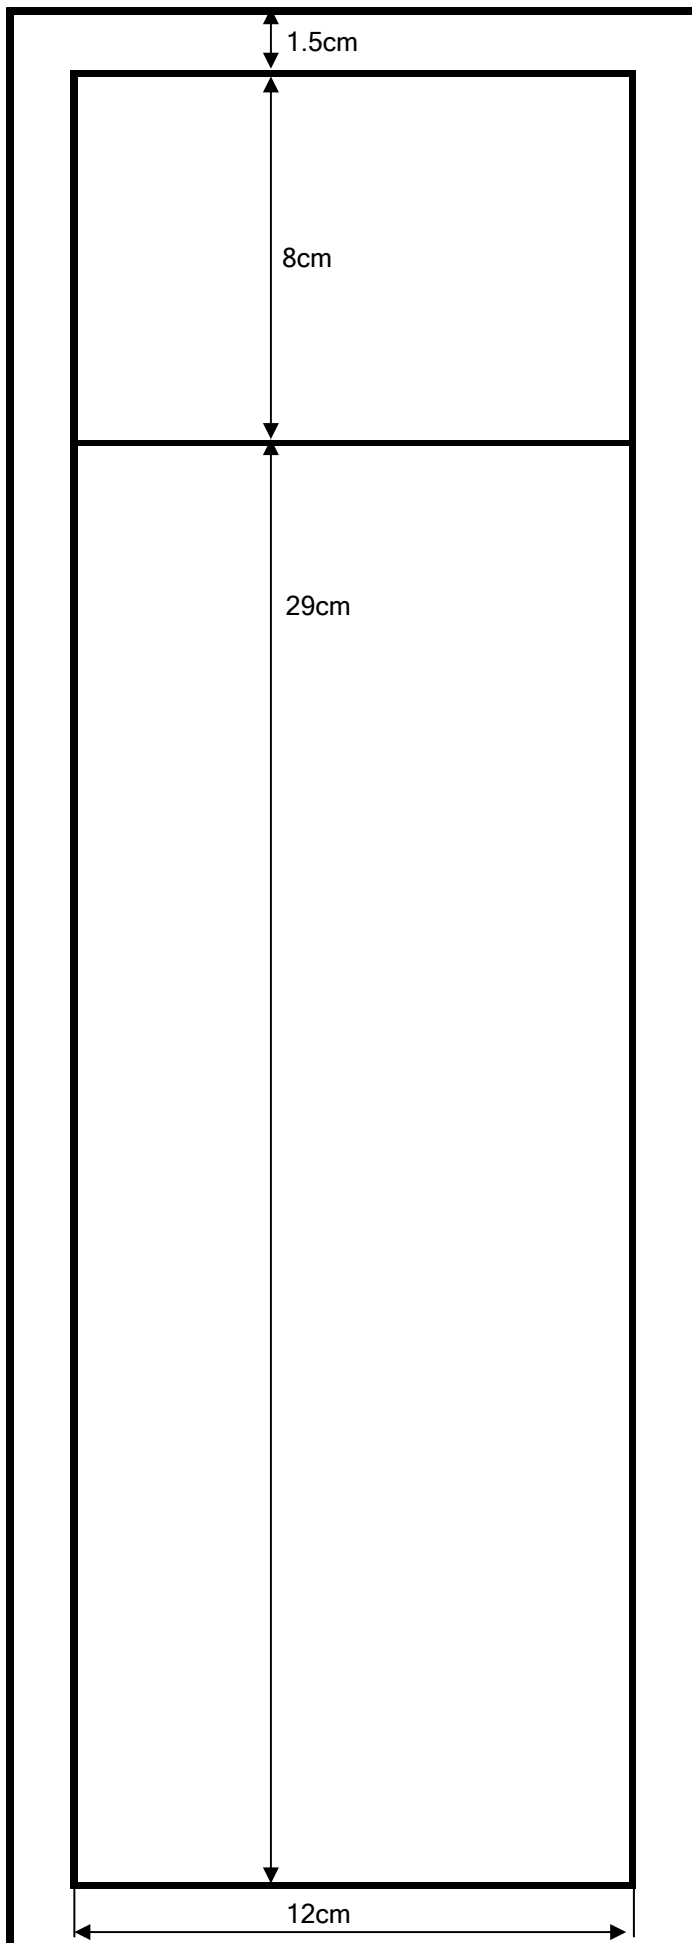

The plates with the words face different directions when on the board.

Lid insides:

The insides of the lid parts are made up of separately inlaid areas.

At the top there is a little area to hold the game pieces, then there is a long area that serves as a place for players to roll the dice, and where you instructions can be read.
